This book was typeset in New Baskerville.
The pictures were done in watercolor and pencil.

it dribbles drops of snow and rain.

Bear should fix that broken pane—

But jobs like that are always kept till after lazy Bear has slept.

He dreams of slipping out the back to fetch himself an icy snack.

But what a shock when he gets there,

the ice cream's gone— the cupboard's bare!

As he turns and starts to shout,

a pile of snow falls on his snout.

At least, that is, he thinks it's snow.
It feels too thick and sticky, though,

and tastes of sugar. Can it mean . . .

it's snowing blobs of white ice cream?

It's twice as nice as snow or ice;

it's Bear's idea of paradise.

Before he tries to eat it all,

he makes himself a little ball,

then rolls it into something grand . . .

the biggest scoop in all the land!

But suddenly it starts to slip,

and Bear begins to lose his grip.

Now it's time without delay . . .

to make a speedy getaway.

He sees a rock—too late to dodge—rolls over once, and . . .

WATCH OUT!

SPLODGE!

"Ice cream!" he screams.
"Ice cream, ice cream!"

Thank heavens, it was all a dream."

Now he does not hesitate;
the household chores will have to wait.

Broken windows should be fixed . . .

but work and pleasure
can't be mixed.

ICE CREAM BEAR

Bear likes ice cream a lot!
So when a marvelous miracle happens and ice cream snow begins to fall from the sky, it's a dream come true. Or is it?
